OMIGOD! An asteroid just fell in the street. Hurry! GO LOOK OUT THE WINDOW!

You can't fool me! It's just a foul plot to EAT MY COOKIES!

Even the asteroid-dropping aliens are in on it!

(You ever thing it's weird that as a speicies, our reaction to danger is to STOP AND STARE AT IT? You would think that would be maladaptive, but giraffes stare at lions [U R so MADE! LyonZZZ!] and impala will watch another impala being eaten.)

As long as you're staring at Duke, he will not steal a cookie. I do not think this works with lions, however.

Ooo. Impala snuff performance art.

I am blaming that typo on having to beat Daphne's hands away from my desk.

But I could be holding your rope, and suddenly go faint from hunger! It's all right to be concerned for your own safety, you know.

Oh, all right.

You may share my cookies.

Duke is on his own, though.

But I warn you, they're terrible. The sensible thing to do would be to let the little old anomaloid, who has no choice, really, because of his accelerated metabolism, suffer through them.

You do realize that trick has never worked? Once? In the entire history of humankind? And maybe going back to pre-human species?

sad face

You just remember, when you're the only one who didn't see it, that I tried to share the awesomeness. Because I am a very sharing person.

If the aliens were going to drop an asteroid near anyone, it's true.

It would be Duke.

If he goes and looks I'll believe you.

Curiously, he has resolved to stay and defend your desk from the aliens when they swarm in through the windows (and out the elevator).

I told him I'd relieve him on that one.

He was eating thousand-year eggs again today. I am pretty sure those are illegal under the Geneva convention, and the aliens have now taken control of his brain.
